

GROUP RADICAL OPENNESS

Radical Openness (RO) is a new evidence-based treatment for disorders of emotional over-control (such as treatment resistant depression and certain eating and personality disorders). In this lively and interactive workshop, participants will learn the important principles of Group Radical Openness (GRO). GRO is firmly based in the theory and practice of RO DBT but incorporates many principles of group therapy. Clients become the main agents of change in a format very different from a standard RO skills-training class.

This workshop will address how to distinguish emotional over and under-control, will recap RO principles, relevant group therapy protocols and give a sound grounding in GRO. There will be the chance to learn and practice ways in which connection, emotional expression and flexibility can be developed in a group setting. There will also be the opportunity to use the RO Tracker, a technique that helps group participants take the lead in bringing about change. Those not currently working with groups may find the concepts useful for understanding over-controlled clients.

Dr. Richard Booth has been running RO and GRO groups for over six years. He is lead author on the recent GRO paper in the Behaviour Therapist special edition on Radical Openness. This is an important development on the standard RO protocol. He has spearheaded this group approach and led the research team that has set down important markers in this developing field at St Patrick's Hospital, Dublin.

Dr. Rachel Egan has ten years experience in running groups (including group work with sex offenders and pioneering steps in using compassion focused therapy in a group format). Over the last three years she has helped to develop the model of GRO and is co-author of the first paper on GRO. Rachel has also presented invited papers on this subject at the last two DBT annual conferences.

Dr. Christine Dunkley was on the treatment-development team and a consultant supervisor of therapists on the pilot site of the NHS randomised controlled trial of RO.

This workshop is suitable for mental health professionals including clinical and counselling psychologists, counsellors, social workers, mental health nurses and CBT practitioners.
